Article of the Optional Protocol:	2 and 5 (2) (b)

* Adopted by the Committee at its 127th session (14 October–8 November 2019).

** The following members of the Committee participated in the examination of the communication: Tania María Abdo Rocholl, Yadh Ben Achour, Ilze Brands Kehris, Arif Bulkan, Ahmed Amin Fathalla, Schuichi Furuya, Christoph Heyns, Bamariam Koita, Photini Pazartzis, Hernán Quezada Cabrera, Vasilka Sancin, José Manuel Santos Pais, Yuval Shany, Hélène Tigroudja, Andreas Zimmermann and Gentian Zyberi.

1.1 The author of the communication, dated 15 November 2015, is Mr. Kestutis Stasaitis a national of Lithuania, born on 5 July 1973. The author claims that the State party has violated his rights under articles 7, 14 (2), 14 (3) (e) and 17 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (the Covenant). The author is represented by counsel, Mr. Tomas Stanislovas.

1.2 On 29 March 2016, the State party submitted its observations on admissibility and asked the Committee to consider the admissibility of the communication separately from its merits. On 1 July 2016, the Committee, acting through its Special Rapporteur on new communications and interim measures, decided to refuse the State party's request that the admissibility of the communication be considered separately from its merits.

The facts as presented by the author

2.1 The author worked as a medical assistant in emergency unit associated with the Vilnius University Emergency Hospital. On 23 October 2009 the author was in service in an ambulance car that was called to a woman patient who had been drunk. On the same night, the patient, later on referred to as the victim of the criminal case brought against the author, filed a criminal report with the police claiming that two men, including the author, had sexual intercourse with her in the ambulance car against her will, taking advantage of her helpless condition. Subsequently, criminal proceedings were initiated against the alleged perpetrators on the suspicion of having committed rape, theft and other crimes under the Criminal Code of Lithuania.

2.2 On 15 December 2010, the author was convicted of rape, theft and other offences by the Vilnius District Court. The author was sentenced to 7 years' imprisonment. On 27 June 2011 the Vilnius Regional Court upheld the judgment of the first instance court. His trial was widely followed by the public through extensive media coverage. He was kept in a metal cage in the court room throughout the criminal proceedings and the journalists were able to take pictures of him in handcuffs. Moreover, his name and photos were published on the internet in connection with the criminal case and, as a result, he received numerous threats from anonymous individuals.

2.3 On 23 January 2012, the Supreme Court of Lithuania slightly modified the decisions of the courts of lower instances as to the theft charge and reduced the author's sentence to 6 years of imprisonment. In relation to the author's claim that he was precluded from cross-examining the victim in breach of the domestic Criminal Procedure Code, the Supreme Court held that considering that the victim was heard on several occasions during the pre-trial investigation phase as well as before the first-instance court, and since the author also had the opportunity to pose questions to the victim at the trial, the dismissal of the author's motions by the lower courts were reasonable.<sup>1</sup>

2.4 The author was released on parole in August 2015.

The complaint

3.1 The author, relying on Article 14 (3) (e) of the Covenant, alleges that "at no stage of internal proceedings" was he provided an opportunity to examine the victim of the criminal case. He accepts having examined the witness one time at a court hearing, however, he submits that this was not a real and effective opportunity for cross-examination, given that at the time he did not have access to the pre-trial investigation documents. In his view, questioning the victim would have been important as she was the only witness attesting to the charges against him and thus his right to efficient defence was breached. The author submits that the following issues would have been of key importance and should have been raised, were he given the chance to re-examine the witness against him: a) the victim was intoxicated by alcohol and her statement was not fully reliable; b) during pre-trial investigation, the victim stated that the author was wearing a doctor's smock, however, the author asserts that he was wearing a red emergency uniform; c) the victim stated that the author injected a substance into her veins and, as a consequence, she lost her ability to move; in contrast, the author alleges that no needles traces were detected on the victim's body and no traces of diazepam or any other similar substances were found in her urine; d) the victim stated that she could not move after the injection, but she could see the author committing the offence; however, the author claims that in order to "see any rape" she had to remove the oxygen mask. e) the victim was the only witness stating that the crime against her was committed in a group,<sup>2</sup> entailing a more serious qualification of charges against him and punishable with a longer prison term. Therefore, the author argues that clarifying these points as regards the circumstances of the incident would have been essential in the course of the criminal proceedings conducted against him.

3.2 The author, relying on article 14 (2) of the Covenant, further complains that his right to be presumed innocent has been infringed as he was kept in a metal cage in the court room throughout the criminal proceedings and the journalists were able to take pictures of him in handcuffs. As a result, he was humiliated in the eyes of the public and he was subject to inhuman and degrading treatment also in breach of article 7 of the Covenant.

3.3 Relying on Article 17 (1) of the Covenant, the author alleges that his right to privacy has been violated due to the fact that the prosecution disclosed his identity to the media during the pre-trial investigation phase. He submits that his trial has been widely followed by the public and the extensive media coverage had an influence on the judges adjudicating on his case. Moreover, his name and photos were published on the internet in connection with the criminal case and as a result, he received numerous threats from anonymous individuals. He also claims that it will be impossible for him to reintegrate into society, once he serves his prison sentence.

3.4 In light of the above, the author claims that the State party has violated his rights under articles 7, 14 (2), 14 (3) (e) and 17 of the Covenant.

State party's observations on admissibility and the merits

4.1 By note verbale dated 29 March 2016, the State party requests the Committee to declare the communication inadmissible partly for non-exhaustion of domestic remedies and partly for non-substantiation under articles 2 and 5 (2) (b) of the Optional Protocol to the Covenant.

4.2 As regards the author's allegations under article 14 (3) (e) of the Covenant, the State party first notes that the cited article does not provide an unlimited right to obtain the attendance of any witness requested by the accused, but only a right to have witnesses admitted that are relevant for the defence, and to be given the opportunity to question and challenge witnesses against the accused at some stage of the proceedings. The state party recalls the Committee's General Comment no. 32 establishing that within these limits, and subject to the limitations on the use of statements, confessions and other evidence obtained in violation of article 7, it is primarily for the domestic legislatures of States parties to determine the admissibility of evidence and how the courts assess them. Turning to the relevant guarantees enshrined in domestic law, the State party also notes that the right of the accused to defence has been acknowledged by the early jurisprudence of the Constitutional Court of Lithuania to be ensured by Article 31 (6) of the Constitution. In addition, the right to defence, as enshrined at the constitutional level, is to be interpreted in light of respective standards of international law, in particular the European Convention of Human Rights, which clearly guarantees the right of the accused persons to examine witnesses against them.

4.3 The State party stresses that in the present case the author was given the opportunity to examine the victim during the course of criminal proceedings. As it transpires from the court documents, the victim in fact had been questioned in the pre-trial investigation phase on three occasions, i.e. on 24 October 2009, 18 November 2009 and 23 March 2010. The victim also attended two hearings of the court of first instance on 10 May 2010 and 2 June 2010. The State party points out that at the hearing of 10 May 2010 the victim gave an extensive and detailed testimony as regards the circumstances of the crime committed against her and the sequence of events that took place on the night of the incident. The State party further submits that it is evident from the transcript of the hearing of the Vilnius District Court that the author and his counsel were allowed to cross-examine the victim and both asked her questions. Therefore, the State party is of the view that the author had the opportunity to challenge the reliability of the victim's testimony and the author's claim alleging the breach of his right to defence by the State party should be dismissed as unfounded.

4.4 The State party adds that the author's requests for additional cross-examination were thoroughly assessed by courts on three instances and were rejected by reasoned decisions. As it appears from the court decisions, the author's requests were rejected primarily because he failed to prove that cross-examining the victim would be necessary or relevant as to the defence considering that the victim had already been questioned in court and accordingly, the right of the author to examine the victim had already been ensured. Secondly, the author's request was overridden by the need for protection of the rights and interests of the victim, i.e. not to expose her to further psychological trauma. Lastly, the victim moved to Norway, thus there were no possibilities to summon her to a court hearing in Lithuania.

4.5 Further, the State party also emphasizes that contrary to the author's allegation, it was not solely the testimony of the victim that led the domestic courts to establish the author's guilt. The State party submits that reports of medical experts, reports on the examination of the victim's clothes, toxicology reports, DNA and serology laboratory results together with expert testimonies and testimonies by medical staff and other witnesses were assessed in their entirety on two court instances.

4.6 In addition, the State party asserts that the allegations raised in the communication as regards the alleged unreliability of the witness testimony of the victim mainly relate to the assessment of facts and their acknowledgement as evidence by the national courts. The State party notes the Committee's well-established case-law in that respect and adds that the Committee should not act as a "fourth instance court" and review the domestic courts' assessment. Relying on the relevant parts of the court decisions, the State party stresses that various courts on three instances thoroughly verified, in accordance with the adversarial principle, the reliability and relevance of all evidence adduced in the case and excluded any doubts or contradictions between the testimonies obtained in the case.

4.7 The State party concludes that the author has failed to substantiate his claims under article 14 (3) (e) of the Covenant for the purposes of admissibility. Thus, this part of the communication shall be declared inadmissible under article 2 of the Optional Protocol to the Covenant as insufficiently substantiated.

4.8 As regards the author's claims under article 14 (2) and 7 of the Covenant, the State party submits that the Lithuanian law safeguards the presumption of innocence, which is set forth under Article 31 of the Constitution of the Republic of Lithuania, as well as in Article 44 (6) of the Criminal Procedure Code. The State party is of the position, however, that the author has failed to exhaust all domestic remedies, as he failed to raise the alleged violation of his right to be presumed innocent at the domestic level, namely before any court instances trying his criminal case.

4.9 In regard to the alleged violation of the author's rights under article 7, the State party also submits that the author has failed to exhaust all domestic remedies as the author could have instituted civil proceedings requesting redress for the alleged damage caused under article 6.272 of the Civil Code of Lithuania.<sup>3</sup> The State party notes that when dealing with the issue of compensation for non-pecuniary damages caused by unlawful actions of the State authorities, the questions of unreasonable delays in criminal proceedings have been addressed extensively in the case-law of the Supreme Court of Lithuania demonstrating that there is no legal uncertainty as to the effectiveness of such a remedy. The State party also draws the Committee's attention to the decision in Svinarenko and Slyadnev v. Russia of the European Court of Human Rights,<sup>4</sup> in which the Court held that the applicants' confinement in a metal cage in the court room amounted to degrading treatment prohibited by Article 3 of the European Convention on Human Rights. The State party highlights that in the cited judgment the Court provided a list of criteria to be considered when deciding whether such treatment could be justified by security considerations in the circumstances of the particular case. Thus, the State party argues that had the author exhausted domestic remedies, the national courts would have been able to assess the circumstances of his case in light of the afore-mentioned factors.

<sup>3</sup> Article 6.272 of the Civil Code of Lithuania reads as follows: "1. Damage resulting either from unlawful conviction, or unlawful arrest, as a measure of suppression, as well as from unlawful detention, or application of unlawful procedural measures of enforcement, or unlawful infliction or administrative penalty – arrest – shall be compensated fully by the state irrespective of the fault of the officials of preliminary investigation, prosecution or court [...] 3. In addition to pecuniary damage, the aggrieved person shall be entitled to non-pecuniary damage [...]".

4.10 As to the alleged violation of the author's rights under article 17, the State party submits that the author has failed to exhaust all domestic remedies. The State party asserts in particular that Lithuanian law provided for two distinct civil remedies against violations of private life in relation to publications: firstly, a claim for damages in respect of damage caused by the publication of erroneous information humiliating a person's honour and secondly, a claim for damages in respect of damage caused by the disclosure of private information without a person's consent, irrespective of whether that information was erroneous or not.<sup>5</sup> The State party provides examples where domestic courts found that the applicants' right to privacy had been breached.<sup>6</sup> Having regard to the jurisprudence of the domestic courts, the State party argues that the author failed to make use of a domestic remedy that was relevant and effective in his case, and therefore his allegations under article 17 (1) shall be declared inadmissible pursuant to article 5 (2) (b) of the Optional Protocol to the Covenant.

Author's comments on the State party's observations

5.1 On 25 June 2016, the author submitted comments on the State party's observations. The author confirms that he indeed had the opportunity to cross-examine the victim once, however, at the time, despite the author's repeated requests, he did not have access to and thus was not aware of the content of the documents that were collected during the pre-trial investigation phase.

5.2 The author further states that the justification provided by the courts, namely that the victim had moved to Norway and that the refusal is necessary in order to protect the victim's psychological well-being, cannot be accepted as no official certificate has been submitted to prove that cross-examination would indeed threaten her psychological condition. The author maintains that having another opportunity to cross-examine the victim would have been essential in his criminal case, and therefore he claims that the State party has breached article 14 (3) (e) of the Covenant.

5.3 In response to the State party's observations in relation to article 14(2) and 7 of the Covenant, the author submits that the domestic remedy invoked by the State party is not capable of putting an end to the violation of rights when they are still ongoing and thus offers redress for the concerned person only post factum. In addition, the State party has not shown that such remedy is indeed effective and can be relied upon for the purposes of admissibility. Accordingly, he claims that his communication cannot be rejected for non-exhaustion of domestic remedies.

<sup>5</sup> The State party notes that article 2.23 of the Civil Code of Lithuania stipulates that: "1. Private life of a natural person shall be inviolable. The information about the private life of a person can only be published with his consent [...] 4. Publication of facts of private life, despite their conformity with reality [...] as well as other unlawful acts, breaching the right to privacy shall constitute a ground to lodge a claim for compensation for pecuniary and non-pecuniary damage incurred by said acts".

<sup>6</sup> In the first case the applicant was awarded compensation due to the fact that private information about the applicant's son and his sexual activities were published in a newspaper without consent. In the second case, the Supreme Court found that the applicant's right to privacy had been breached as information regarding the health and the death of the applicant's son had been published in a newspaper without consent, the claim for compensation then was remanded for re-examination to the court of first instance.

5.4 In response to the State party's observations in relation to article 17 of the Covenant, the author maintains that the State party had a positive obligation to protect his privacy, but it failed to do so. Besides, the domestic remedies invoked by the State party have not been shown to be effective as the State party failed to cite any court cases finding in favour of the concerned person against journalists.

State party's additional observations

6. In a subsequent note verbale dated 25 July 2016, the State party maintains that the communication shall be declared inadmissible for non-substantiation and in relation to certain claims for non-exhaustion of domestic remedies pursuant to articles 2 and 5, paragraph 2 (b) of the Optional Protocol to the Covenant. The State party also submits that should the Committee examine the merits of the complaint, it should consider the State party's observations dated 29 March 2016 in respect of both the admissibility and merits of the author's claims and establish that there has been no violation of articles 14 (2), (3) (e) and 17 (1) of the Covenant for the reasons set out therein.

Issues and proceedings before the Committee

Consideration of admissibility

7.1 Before considering any claim contained in a communication, the Committee must decide, in accordance with article 97 of its rules of procedure, whether the communication is admissible under the Optional Protocol to the Covenant.

7.2 The Committee has ascertained, as required under article 5 (2) (a) of the Optional Protocol, that the same matter is not being examined under another procedure of international investigation or settlement.

7.3 The Committee notes the author's claim under article 17 of the Covenant that his right to privacy has been violated as the prosecution disclosed his identity to the media as a result of which his name and photos were published on the internet making it impossible for him to reintegrate into society after serving his prison sentence. The Committee also notes the State party's argument that Lithuanian law provided for two distinct civil remedies against violations of private life in relation to publications: firstly, a claim for damages in respect of damage caused by the publication of erroneous information humiliating a person's honour and secondly, a claim for damages in respect of damage caused by the disclosure of private information without a person's consent, irrespective of whether that information was erroneous or not. The State party also provided examples of cases in order to show that such remedies are indeed available and effective. The Committee observes that the author did not raise his claim before the domestic courts, and he has not advanced any reasons as to why he might have been unable to do so, or why these remedies would not have been effective in his case. In such circumstances, the Committee concludes that the author has failed to exhaust available domestic remedies. This complaint must therefore be declared inadmissible under article 5 (2) (b) of the Optional Protocol to the Covenant.

7.4 As concerns the author's claims under articles 7 and 14 (2) of the Covenant, the Committee notes the State party's argument that the author could have instituted civil proceedings requesting redress for the alleged damage caused under the Lithuanian law. The Committee also notes the author's submission that even if there had been precedents for providing redress for similar violations of rights, such processes would have afforded only a post factum remedy and could not have therefore been deemed effective. Although the Committee is mindful of the cases provided by the State party to demonstrate that there is no legal uncertainty as to the effectiveness of such remedy, the Committee notes that the cited domestic cases have dealt with the issue of compensation for non-pecuniary damages caused by unreasonable delays in criminal proceedings. Furthermore, the State party makes reference to a case decided by the European Court of Human Rights in 2014, finding a violation in cases dealing with confinement of defendants in a metal cage in courtrooms. Nevertheless, the Committee considers that the State party could not convincingly show that such confinement, which seems to have been a standard practice at the time in Lithuania, would have been considered as an unlawful action of the State authorities by the domestic courts and could have served as a basis for compensation under the cited law at the time. The Committee, therefore, considers that it is not precluded under article 5 (2) (b) of the Optional Protocol to the Covenant from examining the author's claims in relation to articles 7 and 14 (2) of the Covenant.

7.5 Regarding the author's claims under article 14 (3) (e), the Committee notes that the author has brought this issue to the attention of the domestic courts in the course of the criminal proceedings conducted against him. The Committee further observes that the State party has not objected to the admissibility of this part of the communication under article 5 (2) (b) of the Optional Protocol. Accordingly, the Committee considers that the requirements of article 5 (2) (b) of the Optional Protocol have been met as concerns the alleged claims under article 14 (3) (e) of the Covenant.

7.6 Finally, the Committee notes the State party's challenge to admissibility in relation to the author's claims due to non-substantiation. However, the Committee considers that, for the purposes of admissibility, the author has adequately explained the reasons concerning his complaint both under article 14 (3) (e), as well as under articles 7 and 14 (2) of the Covenant. Therefore, the Committee declares the communication admissible and proceeds to its consideration of the merits.

Consideration of the merits

8.1 The Committee has considered the present communication in the light of all the information made available to it by the parties, as required under article 5 (1) of the Optional Protocol.

8.2 As regards the author's claim under article 14 (3) (e) of the Covenant, the Committee notes his complaint that even though he had the opportunity to question the victim once in the course of criminal proceedings, despite his repeated requests, he was not granted access to the pre-trial investigation materials at the time, and thus he could not effectively exercise his right. Therefore, he claims that he should have had the opportunity to cross-examine the victim one more time especially given the inconsistencies of the victim's statements made in the absence of the author in the pre-trial phase that had to have been clarified.

8.3 The Committee notes the State party's defence in this respect claiming that the author and his counsel were allowed to cross-examine the victim during the hearing of the Vilnius District Court and both asked her questions. The Committee is also mindful of the State party's submission that the domestic courts thoroughly examined the request of the author in this respect and provided reasoned decisions for their refusal. Therefore, the State party is of the position that the author's right to examine the witness against him has been respected.

8.4 The Committee recalls its general comment No. 32 (para. 39), according to which article 14 (3) (e) guarantees the right of the accused person to examine, or have examined, the witnesses against them and to obtain the attendance and examination of witnesses on their behalf under the same conditions as witnesses against them. As an application of the principle of equality of arms, this guarantee is important for ensuring an effective defence by the accused and their counsel and thus guarantees the accused the same legal powers of compelling the attendance of witnesses and of examining or cross-examining any witnesses as are available to the prosecution.<sup>7</sup> It does not, however, provide an unlimited right to obtain the attendance of any witness requested by the accused or their counsel, but only a right to have witnesses admitted that are relevant for the defence, and to be given a proper opportunity to question and challenge witnesses against them at some stage of the proceedings. Within these limits, and subject to the limitations on the use of statements, confessions and other evidence obtained in violation of article 7, it is primarily for the domestic legislatures of States parties to determine the admissibility of evidence and how their courts assess it.

8.5 The Committee further recalls its jurisprudence that considerable weight should be given to the assessment conducted by the State party, and that it is generally for the organs of the States parties to the Covenant to review and evaluate facts and evidence in order to determine whether such risk exists, unless it can be established that the evaluation was clearly arbitrary or amounted to a manifest error or denial of justice.<sup>8</sup>

8.6 In the present case, the Committee observes that both the author and his counsel were allowed to cross-examine the victim and both asked her questions at a court hearing on 10 May 2010, where she gave an extensive and detailed testimony. The Committee further observes that the victim's statements whose consistence the author wished to question by examining the witness for the second time, were not the sole evidence on which the courts' findings of guilt were based. The Committee also notes that the issues the author wanted to raise during the requested examination, and about which he learnt only after having examined the witness for the first time, could be raised by the author before the domestic courts and equally assessed by the courts, even without the presence of the victim. The Committee further observes that the domestic courts thoroughly assessed the author's request to secure the attendance of the witness and provided reasoned decisions for their refusal. In that respect, the Committee attaches great importance to the reasoning adduced by the domestic courts stating that the restriction on the author's right was justified by the need for protection of the victim's rights. The Committee notes in this regard the approach taken by the European Court of Human Rights, which in the assessment of the question whether or not an accused received a fair trial, takes into account the rights of the perceived victim.<sup>9</sup> In the circumstances, it is not apparent from the information before the Committee that the court's refusal to allow the author to re-examine the victim was such as to infringe on the equality of arms between the prosecution and the defence. Accordingly, the Committee is unable to conclude that article 14 (3) (e) has been violated.

8.7 As regards the author's allegations under article 14 (2) and 7 of the Covenant, the Committee notes the author's complaint that he was kept in a metal cage in the court room during the court proceedings which he found humiliating and caused him physical pain, and that the journalists were able to take pictures of him while handcuffed. The author submits that such a security measure shall be perceived as excessive and thus amounts to the violation of presumption of innocence and constitutes inhuman and degrading treatment in breach of article 14 (2) and 7 of the Covenant, respectively.

8.8 As regards the author's allegations under article 7 of the Covenant, the issue before the Committee is whether the author's handcuffing and placement in a metal cage during the court hearings subjected him to degrading treatment. The Committee recalls that the prohibition in article 7 is complemented by the positive requirements of article 10 (1) of the Covenant, which stipulate that "all persons deprived of their liberty shall be treated with humanity and with respect for the inherent dignity of the human person." It also recalls its general comment No. 21, which places on the State party a positive obligation to guarantee the human dignity of all persons deprived of their liberty and to ensure that they "enjoy all the rights set forth in the Covenant, subject to the restrictions that are unavoidable in a closed environment" (para. 3).<sup>10</sup> The Committee notes that the State party has addressed these allegations only on the admissibility and has failed to demonstrate that the measure imposed on the author was consistent with article 7 of the Covenant. Accordingly, and in the absence of other pertinent information on file, the Committee concludes that the facts as presented reveal a violation of the author's rights under article 7 of the Covenant.

8.9 As regards the author's allegations under article 14(2) of the Covenant, the Committee recalls its jurisprudence as reflected in its general comment No. 32 (para. 30), according to which the presumption of innocence, which is fundamental to the protection of human rights, imposes on the prosecution the burden of proving the charge, guarantees that no guilt can be presumed until the charge has been proved beyond reasonable doubt, ensures that the accused has the benefit of doubt, and requires that persons accused of a criminal act must be treated in accordance with this principle. It further states that defendants should normally not be shackled or kept in cages during trial or otherwise presented to the court in a manner indicating that they may be dangerous criminals.<sup>11</sup> The media should avoid news coverage undermining the presumption of innocence.

8.10 The Committee notes that the State party has failed to demonstrate that the measure imposed on the author was consistent with article 14 (2) of the Covenant. In particular, it failed to demonstrate that placing the author in a metal cage during the public court hearings with his hands handcuffed, was necessary for the purpose of security or the administration of justice, and that no alternative arrangements could have been made, consistent with the rights of the author. Moreover, photographs of the author in handcuffs were published in the mass media. On the basis of the information before it, the Committee considers that the facts as presented demonstrate that the right of the author to be presumed innocent, as guaranteed under article 14 (2) of the Covenant, has been violated.

9. The Human Rights Committee, acting under article 5 (4) of the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, is of the view that the State party has violated the author's rights under article 7 and under article 14 (2) of the Covenant.

10. In accordance with article 2 (3) (a) of the Covenant, the State party is under an obligation to provide the author with an effective remedy. This requires it to make full reparation to individuals whose Covenant rights have been violated, including adequate compensation in light of the State party's obligations under the Covenant. Additionally, the State party is under the obligation to take steps to avoid similar violations in the future.

11. Bearing in mind that, by becoming a party to the Optional Protocol, the State party has recognized the competence of the Committee to determine whether or not there has been a violation of the Covenant, and that pursuant to article 2 of the Covenant, the State party has undertaken to ensure for all individuals within its territory or subject to its jurisdiction the rights recognized in the Covenant and to provide an effective and enforceable remedy when a violation has been established, the Committee wishes to receive from the State party, within 180 days, information concerning the measures taken to give effect to the Committee's Views. The State party is also requested to publish the present Views and to disseminate them widely in the official languages of the State party.
